Lice & Fluke Treatment

Traditionally this is the time of year that suckler cows and all other types of cattle that were out at grass are treated for liver fluke. At present, most cattle have been in the house for 8 weeks or more, which means that all the fluke picked up before housing has matured, allowing fluke treatment products to achieve an effective kill. Dairy milk cows should receive their fluke treatment at drying off irrespective of the time of year. Lice treatment should also be considered in all types of cattle over the winter months. Look out for cattle scratching or licking themselves.
